INTERNATIONAL YOUNG LEADERS ASSEMBLY

The International Young Leaders Assembly (IYLA) is a premiere leadership practicum that addresses the global challenges of the twenty-first century. Emphasizing the importance of vision, service, and entrepreneurship as the foundation for effective leadership, the IYLA hosts university student leaders and young professionals from around the world for interactive programs at world-class institutions. Participants learn important leadership skills and collaborate on strategies for sustainable peace and development.

History

The inaugural IYLA in Atlanta in 2012 was jointly organized by the Global Peace Foundation, the Points of Light Foundation, the Global Young Leaders Academy and the Dr. Martin Luther King Center for Nonviolent Social Change. The program included participation in the Americas Summit with 12 former heads of state hosted at the Carter Presidential Center, the Global Peace Convention of government and civil society leaders from 40 nations, and the concluding program at the King Center with the leading figures of the Civil Rights Movement in the United States.

The second IYLA, with the support of UN, World Bank, UN Missions, Embassies, and many co-sponsors, drew 800 young leaders from over 70 countries for programs at the United Nations Headquarters in New York, the National Constitution Center in Philadelphia, and the “Working with and for young people is one of my top priorities. Youth are a transformative force; they are creative, resourceful and enthusiastic agents of change. The time has come to integrate youth voices more meaningfully into decision-making processes at all levels.”

—UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon

UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon with IYLA program coordinator Magali Caceres.

“We young people have a responsibility to think differently about the future and to try to innovate this new future. To invent jobs not only to seek jobs.”
—Ambassador Ahmad Alhendawi, United Nations Secretary-General's Envoy on Youth, from his address to the 2013 IYLA

“Those two main words moral and innovative are very important. Not only for you as the young generation who will assume leadership, but for all the leaders in the world.”
—Sri Mulyani Indrawati, Managing Director, World Bank; Former Finance Minister of Indonesia, from her address to the 2013 IYLA

“The United Nations is the perfect venue to begin your investigation and deliberations on moral and innovative leadership. Your three focus areas of vision, service and entrepreneurship are key to building a world of lasting and sustainable world of peace and prosperity.” —H.E. Ambassador Jose Antonia Dos Santos, Permanent Representative of Paraguay to the UN, from his address to the 2013 IYLA

“I find this trip to be fantastic. I have two points for you from my experience at IYLA. One is the power of persistence and positivity. Two is the magic of relationships. I feel like when we come together, put our ideas, energies, and our passion together we can make millions of impacts.”
—Afroz Algiers, Stanford University (India)

“It was the greatest event I have attended so far. It was really inspiring because young leaders from the entire world came and shared their experiences. . . . These moments are unforgettable.”
—Clarisse Lee, Paris Diderot University (France)

“We need to make connections and build community life. It is about connections, about building friendships and making alliances, for that is what builds community.”
—Melinda Sanchez, National Program Associate – Esperanza (USA)

“We, young leaders, want to devote ourselves to contribute to world peace and development. One world one dream. You and I are from one world, we are family.”
—Xiaoxuan Liu, Beijing Sino-Classic Consulting (China)

“I am back to school right now, but the visions and dreams I got from IYLA still linger in my heart. I thank you so much for giving me this great opportunity, and I definitely wish to come back next year as well.” —Suh Jung Rachel Lee, Yonsei University (South Korea)

“I was so happy and excited to join IYLA 2013. IYLA teaches us many things that are very important to young people—to learn how to be a good leader in a democracy to make a better world.” —Sururudin Sui, lawyer and candidate for Indonesia House of Representatives (Indonesia)
